Why you Should Attend?

In their just released New York Times, #1 Wall Street Journal, and USA Today Bestselling book, BLUE OCEAN SHIFT, Kim and Mauborgne meet this new challenge head-on by analyzing and comparing the successes and failures of blue ocean projects across the globe that have sprung out of the movement they began nearly 30 years ago. In a variety of sectors from business- to-customer and business-to-business, to public, nonprofit, and governments, Kim and Mauborgne developed a concise understanding of the process of new market creation and growth that unlocks people's creativity as much as their confidence to act.

In this two day workshop you will learn the systematic five-step approach that incorporates insights into human psychology to build people's confidence to succeed. Led by Jason Hunter, a Blue Ocean practitioner for more than 15 years and the source of a number of the book's cases, we will first set out to help you find the right starting point and construct the best possible team. Next, we will focus on market-creating tools to help your company better understand where it is and where it could venture to seize new growth. They we will learn how to systematically recreate your market boundaries, and developing and choosing your "blue ocean move." Finally, we will focus on how to rapidly market test your strategic options and launch your new offering that will minimize risks and maximize the up-side.
